Follow these guidelines when word processing a bibliography:

- *Single-space your bibliography.
- *Double space between entries.
- *Do not number your entries in the bibliography.
- Alphabetize your bibliography by author; the author's last name goes first. If there is no author, use the title for alphabetizing.
- *First line of a bibliography is not indented; the second line is indented.
- *Pay attention to punctuation within each entry; remember to end each entry with a period.
- *Underline book, encyclopedia, and magazine titles.
- *Use quotes “ ” around the titles of encyclopedia and magazine articles.

Other tips:

- *Do the best you can to find complete bibliographic information. It may involve some “digging”. If you cannot find the author, then use the title for the author entry. Other missing pieces of information may be explained by putting parentheses () around the name of the type of information you are missing with a question mark at the end. For example: (Publisher?)
- *Bibliographic information may be hard to find on a web site. Again it may take some work on your part. Often there is some information at the end of the web site as far as the date of origin or last revision of the web site. There may be a contact person named at the bottom of the web site who may be the author or the webmaster of the web site. You may have to click on the “webmaster” link to find out about the origin of material on the web site.
- *Note! The name of the search engine or search directory you used to find the web site where you found your information is not the web address (URL) you use in your bibliography. The web site where you got your information is what you use along with the other required information for citing an Internet source. For example: www.google.com is the search engine, and www.howthingswork.com is the source of the information.
